Oh No! It's the Organ Bomb!

A few days ago the mainstream media reported another terrorist tactic, dreamed up by the government.

First we had the hi-jacking variety of terrorists. Airport security dealt with this problem by making sure we weren't carrying box cutters, lighters, plastic knives, paper clips, toy hammers, or other types of weapons. (But it was perfectly okay to carry matches, because match fires aren't as dangerous as lighter fires.)

Then we had the bumbling government-created shoe bomber, which resulted in airline passengers having to take off their shoes before boarding.

Then we had the equally inept government-created underwear bomber who allegedly attempted to blow up his worm with a fire cracker. Around about the same time, the government also fed us the hypothesis that women with breast implants could be carrying explosives in their mock mammaries. These two fairy tales resulted in airline passengers having to be radiated by the naked-body scanners, or if one chose not to comply, the TSA would arrange to have the passenger molested for no extra charge.

And now, the government has created a new kind of terrorist, because we simply weren't being radiated and groped enough as it was! Now, the government has dreamed up the possibility that people (i.e. "terrorists") could be implanting explosive devices in their bodies to perform acts of terror. (Although the remainder of this article is satirical in nature, rest assured that I didn't make up this story! It was reported by USA Today, FOX, CNN and other sources.)

Using the standard equation, "Create a problem" + "Wait for (or create) a panic" = "Present a solution that the majority will accept because they're too afraid not to!", (more commonly referred to as "Problem, Reaction, Solution" or "The Hegelian Dialectic") I believe that we can predict how the government will deal with this new type of terrorist, which could potentially be any one of us!!!

Living Autopsies!

A more thorough method to detect the explosive devices (as opposed to body scans) would be to submit everyone to an autopsy before boarding their flights. For those who associate the term with death, however, we shall simply call it "exploratory surgery." The term "autopsy" has been given such a bad rap that the people simply wouldn't consent to such a thing — but then again, surgery is also an unpleasant word. Let's just call it an exploratory procedure.

Not only will such a procedure convince the TSA that you're not a terrorist, it will also put your mind at ease in case you're in doubt as to whether your doctor (or your friendly TSA agent) may have implanted a bomb during your last procedure!

Free Cat Scans!

Or, we might just see new equipment at the TSA checkpoints. Cats cans may replace the body scanners, giving the TSA a more thorough look into our bodies, and a less invasive alternative to the living autopsies. The cost of the "Free" cat scan will be included in your ticket price, much like the cost for "Free" government benefits is included in the missing portion of your paycheck. For an additional fee, you might even be able to schedule a doctor consultation to interpret the TSA's cat scan results.

Complete Cavity Checks

Although cavity checks wouldn't be a thorough way to detect explosive devices in your armpit, thigh or liver, it will at least stop you from hiding such items in your body's little hidey-holes, including those which are seen by all, (such as mouth, ears and nostrils) as well as the more private cavities. And men, don't be so smug thinking that you will only be violated once! Remember, where a catheter can go, a tiny explosive may be able to go!

Remote Controlled Detonators

The most successful way to detect explosive devices in one's body, in my opinion, would be to invent a contraption that would detonate all types of explosives, whether liquid, plastic or electronic. Then, all the TSA has to do is to push the button and see if you explode!

If you do explode, somebody will be standing by to pick up all of your parts — which will be added to the "No Fly List", as well as the No Life List. However, if you do not explode, you can then step through the metal detector to eliminate the doubt that you're a box-cutter-carrying terrorist, and then step into the body scanner which will send radiation through your body in order to eliminate the possibility that you are carrying fireworks in your underpants. And of course, you can always “opt out” and have TSA agents grope and pinch your previously-private parts.

Whatever the TSA decides to do to combat the Belly Bombers, the Kidney Kaboomers, the Armpit Assassins, the Tonsil Terrorists and the Manhood Mutilators, rest assured, they have already received the training to deal with this problem and they're simply waiting for the right time to spring it on us. You can also be assured that if any additional equipment is needed to radiate or torture the flying public, the government contract has already been signed and the equipment will soon be shipped to an airport near you!
